Раскадровка для ChatGPT, синий час

промты кадров 2–11 · кадр 1 готов

Статичные кадры под сценарий `scenario-sinij-chas.md`. Это стартовые картинки для каждого плана: из них потом делается видео. Картинки в ChatGPT бесплатны, поэтому каждую можно переделывать, а токены тратятся только на видео.

Замок личности теперь содержит два уровня по каждому признаку: указатель на референс и перечень характеристик (`geroy-harakteristiki.md`). Если характеристика не совпадает с твоим главным кадром, поправь её в файле и в промтах: расхождение хуже, чем отсутствие перечня.

Кадр 1 готов: это утверждённый главный кадр героя (средний план, три четверти).

Как пользоваться

1. В каждом кадре сверху написано, какие файлы приложить. Порядок важен: первым всегда утверждённый главный кадр героя, вторым (где нужно) картинка принта. Роли названы в самом промте.
2. Промт копируется целиком, одной кнопкой. Менять ничего не надо.
3. После генерации проверь четыре вещи: лицо и цвет глаз совпадают с главным кадром, в бороде нет седины, принт не «поплыл» (кадры 4 и 10), кожа без сетки мелких морщин.
4. Если кожа или седина не исправляются за две попытки, не крути формулировку: правь сам кадр сообщением в чате (раздел 9 в `realizm.md`).
5. Показывай заказчице только утверждённые кадры.

Порядок, который выгоднее: сначала 4, 7, 8 (герой крупнее, там виден риск лица), потом 2, 6, 10 (дальние), потом вставки 3, 5, 9.

Первая звезда в небе по желанию заказчицы: в промты кадров 6 и 9 добавить фразу `A single faint star is just visible high in the sky.`

КАДР 2 — дальний, сверху и сбоку (начальный кадр проезда)

Приложить: 1) утверждённый главный кадр героя. Второй файл не нужен: принт на таком размере не читается.

The man in the first attached image is the subject. Preserve his identity exactly. Do not redesign him, do not idealise him, do not beautify him, do not make him younger or older, do not make his face more symmetrical. Below, "the reference" means the first attached image.

Take the following directly from the reference, unchanged. His face, as far as it can be read at this size, is the face of the man in the reference: a tanned light-olive skin tone with a warm undertone.
BEARD — the exact length and density, and the exact colour: a uniform dark brown, the same brown as the hair at his temples, with no grey, white or silver hair anywhere in it. On the reference: short stubble of about three to six millimetres, dense on the chin and along the jaw, thinner on the cheeks, with a short moustache.
HAIR — the exact length, the exact wave, the exact way it is swept back and to one side, the exact base colour, the exact sun-bleached lighter strands, and the matte dry salt-air texture. No gel, no shine, no restyling. On the reference: medium length down to the collar line, loose waves, swept back from the forehead and to one side with a longer front section falling across the forehead, a medium-brown base with golden sun-bleached highlights, fine dry strands with flyaway hairs.
AGE AND BUILD — exactly as in the reference: a man in his late forties with a lean build.
Invent nothing about the face, the hair or the build.

Wardrobe, small in the frame and as in the reference: an open cream linen shirt with the sleeves pushed up over a cream cotton t-shirt, loose muted grey-brown linen trousers, and the wooden beads at his neck. His feet are hidden in the grass and out of frame.

Framing and pose, this is what changes from the reference: a wide vertical shot taken from above and from the side, the camera about three metres above his head and five metres to his right, looking down along the clifftop. He is a small figure, about one eighth of the frame height, seated in the grass in the right third of the frame, well back from the cliff edge with several metres of open grass between him and the drop, his torso toward the camera and his head turned toward the left of the frame, where the pale band of the horizon lies; one forearm rests on his raised knee. Beyond him the grass ends at the cliff edge, which falls away to a narrow shingle beach and a thin line of surf, and the chalk cliffs run off to the right in a long receding line. In the foreground a few dark shrubs and dry grass pass very close to the lens, soft and out of focus, giving the shot depth. A steady sea wind bends the grass and the shrubs and lifts his hair.

Light: the clifftop at Seven Sisters, East Sussex, England, in the blue hour, twenty minutes after sunset. There is no sun and no visible light source in frame. The only light is the dusk sky itself, soft and low-key. The sea is dark slate, the sky a deep muted blue-grey that lightens to a thin pale band along the horizon at the far left, and the chalk cliffs are pale grey-blue. His shirt is a pale cool grey-white shape, dimmer than the pale band on the horizon and lit by the same dusk sky as everything else. White balance is neutral and colours are natural and unsaturated.

Realism: the scene is rendered as a real landscape photograph at a real scale. The figure has natural proportions for his size at this distance, with the weight of his body pressing slightly into the grass and a soft contact shadow beneath him. The grass is made of individual blades, bent by the wind at different angles. The chalk cliffs show their real horizontal strata and weathered vertical grooves, and they fade with distance into a gentle atmospheric haze. The surf is thin lace-like foam with uneven edges. Tones are soft with a natural tonal range, and the finest detail is held at the figure and at the cliff edge.

Rendering: a candid documentary photograph on a full-frame camera, 24 mm lens, f/5.6, ISO 800, the man and the cliff line in focus, the foreground shrubs soft, ungraded colour as it comes from the camera, a clean low-noise file.

КАДР 3 — вставка, макро, волна у подножия скалы

Приложить: ничего. Героя нет, референс не нужен.

The wet base of the chalk wall rises out of the top of the frame. At its foot a dark band of water stain, above it the chalk is dry and pale grey-blue with fine horizontal veins and a little loose scree. A narrow shingle beach lies against the wall, the wet stones dark and glistening. A wave arrives at the foot of the wall and spreads over the shingle as lace-like foam with small bubbles; part of the foam is already sliding back and leaves a wet shining trail on the stones. The wall and the water at its foot fill the frame completely, and no horizon is visible.

Light: the clifftop at Seven Sisters, East Sussex, England, in the blue hour, twenty minutes after sunset. There is no sun and no visible light source in frame. The only light is the soft dusk sky. The water close to the shore is dark grey-green, the foam is the lightest thing in the frame and reads clean grey-white, and the chalk wall is cool and pale. White balance is neutral and colours are natural and unsaturated.

Rendering: a candid documentary photograph on a full-frame camera, 100 mm macro lens, f/4, ISO 800, shallow depth of field with the foam in the foreground sharp and the far water softly blurred, ungraded colour, a clean low-noise file.

КАДР 4 — средний-широкий, профиль (по пояс)

Приложить: один файл, главный кадр героя (обновлённый, с приглушённым принтом). Принт берётся с футболки на нём. Если профиль не держит лицо, запасной вариант: три четверти с другой высоты.

The man in the first attached image is the subject. Preserve his identity exactly. Do not redesign him, do not idealise him, do not beautify him, do not make him younger or older, do not make his face more symmetrical. Below, "the reference" means the first attached image.

Take the following directly from the reference, unchanged. Each feature below is named twice: first as the exact feature of the reference, then, after "On the reference:", with its measured characteristics.
EYES — the exact iris colour, the exact eye shape, the lid fold, the depth of the set, the spacing between the eyes, the brow shape and weight above them, and the fine lines at the outer corners. Do not change the iris colour. Do not enlarge, widen or prettify the eyes. On the reference: a light grey-blue iris with a darker outer ring, almond-shaped eyes set slightly deep, a visible upper-lid fold, fine crow's-feet at the outer corners; brows dark brown, straight with a slight arch, medium thickness, set low and close to the eyes.
NOSE — the exact bridge line including its slight curvature, the exact width, the exact tip and its angle, the exact nostrils. Do not straighten or slim it. On the reference: a long straight bridge, medium width, a soft rounded tip, narrow nostrils.
MOUTH — the exact lip thickness and the exact ratio of upper lip to lower, the exact cupid's bow, the natural lip colour. Do not fill or redraw them. On the reference: a thinner upper lip and a fuller lower lip, a mouth of medium width, the corners level to slightly down, a natural pinkish-brown lip colour.
FACE STRUCTURE — the exact cheekbone height and width, the hollow beneath them, the jaw width, the chin shape, the forehead height and the hairline. On the reference: an oblong face, a forehead of medium height, high prominent cheekbones with a lean hollow beneath them, an angular jaw of medium width, a medium chin that is slightly square.
SKIN — the exact tone and undertone, the exact degree of tan and weathering, the sun-redness across the cheekbones and the bridge of the nose, and the lines that are really there: the forehead lines, the fine lines at the outer corners of the eyes and the nasolabial folds, each at its natural depth and no deeper. Keep the skin as worn as it is in the reference. Do not smooth it, do not retouch it, do not add makeup. On the reference: a tanned light-olive tone with a warm undertone, sun-redness across the cheekbones and the bridge of the nose, a few scattered freckles and sun spots on the cheeks and nose, fine pores visible only on the nose and cheeks, three to four horizontal lines on the forehead, and nasolabial folds.
BEARD — the exact length, the exact density and where it grows and where it does not. Its colour is a uniform dark brown, the same brown as the hair at his temples: every hair in the beard, the moustache and the stubble is brown, and there is no grey, white or silver hair in it anywhere. On the reference: short stubble of about three to six millimetres, dense on the chin and along the jaw, thinner on the cheeks, with a short moustache.
HAIR — the exact length, the exact wave, the exact way it is swept back and to one side, the exact base colour, the exact sun-bleached lighter strands, and the matte dry salt-air texture. No gel, no shine, no restyling. On the reference: medium length down to the collar line, loose waves, swept back from the forehead and to one side with a longer front section falling across the forehead, a medium-brown base with golden sun-bleached highlights, fine dry strands with flyaway hairs.
AGE AND BUILD — exactly as in the reference: a man in his late forties with a lean build.
Invent nothing about the face, the hair or the build. Where a detail is not visible in the reference, keep it neutral rather than inventing it.

Wardrobe, all of it visible in frame: an open cream linen shirt with the sleeves pushed up, worn over a cream cotton t-shirt, and the single short strand of small round amber-brown wooden beads sitting snug at the base of the neck, the shirt and the beads exactly as in the reference. The shirt is soft natural linen, loosely draped, mostly smooth with a few broad soft creases. On the chest of the t-shirt, centred, is the printed design exactly as it appears on the t-shirt in the reference, reproduced exactly as it is there: the same shapes, the same colours, the same proportions and the same details, a clean intact print with solid ink, lying flat on the cotton and following the folds of the fabric, taking the same dusk light as the rest of the garment.

Framing and pose, this is what changes from the reference: a medium-wide shot, vertical, from the top of the head with room above it down to the waist, so the open shirt, the whole t-shirt print, the beads and a little of the grass in front of him are all in frame. He sits on a grassy slope well back from the edge of a chalk cliff, with several metres of open grass between him and the drop, the camera at the height of his face and to his right, so that his head is seen in profile, facing the left of the frame; his shoulders and torso are turned a little toward the camera, as in the reference, so the print is visible. His gaze travels to the left, to the pale band of the horizon, far past the frame. Head upright, chin level, shoulders relaxed, hands below the bottom edge of frame. Expression still and inward, unperformed: neither sad nor smiling, a man thinking rather than posing. A steady sea wind blows along the frame and lifts the strands of his hair toward the left, across the forehead and off the temple, and stirs the collar of the shirt. His head takes roughly one quarter of the frame height, set slightly right of centre.

Background and light: the clifftop at Seven Sisters, East Sussex, England, in the blue hour, twenty minutes after sunset. There is no sun and no visible light source in frame. The only light is the dusk sky itself, a large soft source to the left, so on his face, which looks toward it, the light is gentle and even, with softly graded shadows under the cheekbone, along the nose and under the lower lip. Exposure is low-key: the scene is dim, but his face is fully readable and nothing is crushed to black. His skin keeps its natural warm tone; only the sky and the distance take the cool dusk colour. Behind him the chalk cliffs are pale grey-blue soft shapes with no readable cliff detail and the sea is dark slate, both fully defocused, with the sky a deep muted blue-grey that lightens to a thin pale band along the horizon at the far left. Colours are natural and unsaturated. The same single light falls on his clothes: the left shoulder and the left sleeve are the lighter ones, the right shoulder and the right side of the shirt fall into soft cool shadow, there is no frontal fill, and the white linen is dimmer than the lightest part of the sky near the horizon, reading as a cool grey-white in the shadows rather than a bright cream.

Hair: all the hair, on his head and in his beard, is brown to sun-bleached golden-brown, and there are no grey or white hairs anywhere, none at the temples, none in the moustache and none in the beard or the stubble. Every hair is resolved as an individual strand: strands of uneven thickness that cross, separate and lie in different directions, fine flyaway hairs lifting at the temples and crown, light passing through the thinnest strands at the edges, and beard hairs visible one by one, growing at different angles with uneven length.

Rendering: a candid documentary photograph on a full-frame camera, 85 mm lens, f/1.8, ISO 800, 1/125 second, a clean low-noise file, shallow depth of field, ungraded colour as it comes from the camera. Fine detail is strongest at the eyes; the shirt, the grass and the sky are rendered softer and calmer than the face. The skin is that of a clean unretouched photograph: tone changes softly across the large planes of the forehead, cheeks and neck, fine pores are visible only on the nose and cheeks where the light catches them, expression lines appear only where the face really creases, and the rest of the surface is continuous and calm, without an all-over network of tiny wrinkles.

КАДР 5 — вставка, чайка над водой

Приложить: ничего.

A vertical photograph of a single seagull gliding over the sea in the blue hour, photographed with a long lens from the shore.

The gull is small in the frame, in the right third, caught in a smooth glide with its wings spread wide and level, its head turned slightly toward the left of the frame. It is the only bird in the frame. Below it lies dark slate water with long soft swells; the sky above is a deep muted blue-grey that lightens to a thin pale band along the horizon at the far left.

Light: the clifftop at Seven Sisters, East Sussex, England, in the blue hour, twenty minutes after sunset. There is no sun and no visible light source in frame. The only light is the soft dusk sky. The gull is pale grey and white against the darker sky, with clean readable wing feathers. White balance is neutral and colours are natural and unsaturated.

Rendering: a candid documentary photograph on a full-frame camera, 300 mm lens, f/5.6, ISO 800, the gull sharp, the water and the sky smooth, ungraded colour, a clean low-noise file.

The first attached image is the view and the camera: take from it only the place, the cliff, the sea, the sky, the shingle in the foreground and the way the camera looks up the cliff from the beach. Do not take the figure from it.

The man in the second attached image is the subject. Preserve his identity exactly. Do not redesign him, do not idealise him, do not beautify him, do not make him younger or older, do not make his face more symmetrical. Below, "the reference" means the second attached image.

Take the following directly from the reference, unchanged. His face, as far as it can be read at this size, is the face of the man in the reference: a tanned light-olive skin tone with a warm undertone.

AGE AND BUILD — exactly as in the reference: a man in his late forties with a lean build.
Invent nothing about the face, the hair or the build.

Wardrobe, tiny in the frame and exactly as in the reference: an open cream linen shirt with the sleeves pushed up over a cream cotton t-shirt, loose muted grey-brown linen trousers, and the wooden beads at his neck. His feet are hidden in the grass.

Framing and pose, this is what changes from the reference: a very wide vertical shot taken from the shingle beach far below, the camera at the height of a standing person and looking up the white chalk cliff, exactly as in the first image: the cliff wall rises along the right side of the frame in strong perspective from the loose scree at its foot to its grassy top, a second cliff fades into haze behind it, and the dark sea runs to the horizon at the lower left under a thin pale band of light. The top of the cliff is a rounded grassy hill that rises gently away from the brink, and the man sits on the crest of that hill, well back from the brink, with a broad stretch of open grass, about ten metres, between him and the drop; the brink is a clear line in front of and below him, and a few low gorse bushes grow near him. Because the hill rises behind the brink he is seen against the sky above the grass crest, tiny in the frame, about one twentieth of the frame height, a small pale figure in the upper right quarter of the frame. He sits in the seated pose of the reference: one knee raised, one forearm resting on it, the hand relaxed, his torso turned a little toward the camera, his face lifted toward the sky, chin raised, as if asking the sky a question. The sky fills more than half of the frame. In the foreground a few wet pebbles of the shingle are soft and out of focus. A steady sea wind bends the grass along the crest and lifts his hair.

Light: the foot of the chalk cliffs at Seven Sisters, East Sussex, England, in the blue hour, twenty minutes after sunset. There is no sun and no visible light source in frame. The only light is the dusk sky itself, soft and low-key. The sky is a deep muted blue-grey with thin high cloud and lightens to a thin pale band along the horizon at the far left; the sea is dark slate, the chalk wall pale grey-blue, cool and dim, and his shirt is a pale cool grey-white shape, dimmer than the pale band on the horizon and lit by the same dusk sky as everything else. White balance is neutral and colours are natural and unsaturated.

Realism: the scene is rendered as a real landscape photograph at a real scale. The chalk wall shows its real horizontal strata, vertical weathering grooves and a few ledges of grass, with loose scree at its foot, and it fades toward the top into a gentle atmospheric haze. The shingle is made of individual pebbles of different shapes and sizes, the wet ones reflecting the sky softly. The figure at the top is tiny but has natural proportions for his size at this distance, a small pale shape against the sky. The sea is dark and calm, with long soft swells and fine ripples on their surface. Tones are soft with a natural tonal range, and the finest detail is held on the chalk wall and the figure.

Rendering: a candid documentary photograph on a full-frame camera, 24 mm lens, f/8, ISO 800, the cliff, the figure and the sea in focus, the foreground pebbles soft, ungraded colour as it comes from the camera, a clean low-noise file.

The shirt is open and not buttoned at the collar, and the t-shirt is worn under it; both continue below the bottom edge of the frame.

Framing and pose, this is what changes from the reference: a medium close shot, vertical, taken from far below: the camera about half a metre below his chin and tilted up about thirty degrees, so the underside of his jaw and chin is visible, from the top of the head with a little air above it down to the collarbones. He sits on a grassy slope well back from the edge of a chalk cliff, with several metres of open grass between him and the drop; his head is turned three-quarters toward the left of the frame, chin raised, his gaze lifted into the sky. The sky behind him fills the whole frame. Expression still and inward, unperformed: neither sad nor smiling, a man thinking rather than posing. A steady sea wind blows along the frame and lifts the strands of his hair toward the left. His head takes roughly two fifths of the frame height.

The shirt is open and not buttoned; both garments continue below the bottom edge of the frame.

Framing and pose, this is what changes from the reference: a close vertical shot, from the top of the head with a little air above it down to the shoulders, the camera a little below the height of his face and closer than in the reference. He is turned three-quarters toward the left of the frame, as in the reference, his head lowered and tilted slightly down, his shoulders dropped, his eyes cast down toward the ground, so the lids are half closed and the gaze never reaches the lens. Expression still and inward, the most closed moment of the clip: a man alone with a thought, neither sad nor smiling, unperformed. A steady sea wind lifts a few strands of his hair across the forehead. His head takes roughly one half of the frame height, set slightly right of centre, and his hands are out of frame.

Background and light: the clifftop at Seven Sisters, East Sussex, England, in the blue hour, twenty minutes after sunset. There is no sun and no visible light source in frame. The only light is the dusk sky itself, a large soft source to the left, so the light on his face is gentle, brighter on the left side and softly darker on the right, where the skin keeps its detail; the shadows under the brow, along the nose and under the lower lip are soft. Exposure is low-key: his face is fully readable and nothing is crushed to black. His skin keeps its natural warm tone. Behind him the sea and the cliffs are only soft pale-grey and dark-slate shapes, fully defocused. Colours are natural and unsaturated. The same single light falls on his clothes: the left shoulder and the left sleeve are the lighter ones, the right shoulder and the right side of the shirt fall into soft cool shadow, there is no frontal fill, and the white linen is dimmer than the lightest part of the sky near the horizon, reading as a cool grey-white in the shadows rather than a bright cream.

Hair: all the hair, on his head and in his beard, is brown to sun-bleached golden-brown, and there are no grey or white hairs anywhere, none at the temples, none in the moustache and none in the beard or the stubble. Every hair is resolved as an individual strand: strands of uneven thickness that cross, separate and lie in different directions, fine flyaway hairs lifting at the temples and crown, light passing through the thinnest strands at the edges, and beard hairs visible one by one, growing at different angles with uneven length.

Rendering: a candid documentary photograph on a full-frame camera, 85 mm lens, f/1.8, ISO 800, 1/125 second, a clean low-noise file, shallow depth of field, ungraded colour as it comes from the camera. Fine detail is strongest at the eyes; the shirt and the background are rendered softer and calmer than the face. The skin is that of a clean unretouched photograph: tone changes softly across the large planes of the forehead, cheeks and neck, fine pores are visible only on the nose and cheeks where the light catches them, expression lines appear only where the face really creases, and the rest of the surface is continuous and calm, without an all-over network of tiny wrinkles.

A vertical photograph of the open sea toward the horizon in the last light of the blue hour, photographed with a long telephoto lens, so the space is compressed and flat.

The dark sea fills the lower three quarters of the frame in long soft swells, almost black near the bottom and a little lighter toward the horizon. Along the horizon at the far left lies a thin pale band of fading light, the last trace of the sunset, soft at its edges. Above it the sky is a deep muted blue-grey, darkening toward the top of the frame. The horizon is an empty, clean line where the water meets the sky.

Light: the blue hour, twenty minutes after sunset. The pale band is the only brighter thing in the frame, and the sea carries only a faint cool sheen. White balance is neutral and colours are natural and unsaturated.

Realism: the scene is rendered as a real seascape photograph at a real scale. The swells are long and low with fine ripples on their surface, the far water softens into a gentle haze toward the horizon, and the pale band has a smooth, natural gradient into the sky, with no banding and no hard edges. The water close to the camera carries a faint cool sheen of the sky and no glitter. Tones are soft with a natural tonal range, and the finest detail is held on the swells in the middle of the frame.

Rendering: a candid documentary photograph on a full-frame camera, 400 mm lens, f/5.6, ISO 1600, ungraded colour, smooth and quiet, a clean low-noise file.

The man in the first attached image is the subject. Preserve his identity exactly. Do not redesign him, do not idealise him, do not beautify him, do not make him younger or older, do not make his face more symmetrical. Below, "the reference" means the first attached image.

Take the following directly from the reference, unchanged. Each feature below is named twice: first as the exact feature of the reference, then, after "On the reference:", with its measured characteristics.
EYES — the exact iris colour, the exact eye shape, the lid fold, the depth of the set, the spacing between the eyes, the brow shape and weight above them, and the fine lines at the outer corners. Do not change the iris colour. Do not enlarge, widen or prettify the eyes. On the reference: a light grey-blue iris with a darker outer ring, almond-shaped eyes set slightly deep, a visible upper-lid fold, fine crow's-feet at the outer corners; brows dark brown, straight with a slight arch, medium thickness, set low and close to the eyes.
NOSE — the exact bridge line including its slight curvature, the exact width, the exact tip and its angle, the exact nostrils. Do not straighten or slim it. On the reference: a long straight bridge, medium width, a soft rounded tip, narrow nostrils.
MOUTH — the exact lip thickness and the exact ratio of upper lip to lower, the exact cupid's bow, the natural lip colour. Do not fill or redraw them. On the reference: a thinner upper lip and a fuller lower lip, a mouth of medium width, the corners level to slightly down, a natural pinkish-brown lip colour.
FACE STRUCTURE — the exact cheekbone height and width, the hollow beneath them, the jaw width, the chin shape, the forehead height and the hairline. On the reference: an oblong face, a forehead of medium height, high prominent cheekbones with a lean hollow beneath them, an angular jaw of medium width, a medium chin that is slightly square.
SKIN — the exact tone and undertone, the exact degree of tan and weathering, the sun-redness across the cheekbones and the bridge of the nose, and the lines that are really there: the forehead lines, the fine lines at the outer corners of the eyes and the nasolabial folds, each at its natural depth and no deeper. Keep the skin as worn as it is in the reference. Do not smooth it, do not retouch it, do not add makeup. On the reference: a tanned light-olive tone with a warm undertone, sun-redness across the cheekbones and the bridge of the nose, a few scattered freckles and sun spots on the cheeks and nose, fine pores visible only on the nose and cheeks, three to four horizontal lines on the forehead, and nasolabial folds.
BEARD — the exact length, the exact density and where it grows and where it does not. Its colour is a uniform dark brown, the same brown as the hair at his temples: every hair in the beard, the moustache and the stubble is brown, and there is no grey, white or silver hair in it anywhere. On the reference: short stubble of about three to six millimetres, dense on the chin and along the jaw, thinner on the cheeks, with a short moustache.
HAIR — the exact length, the exact wave, the exact way it is swept back and to one side, the exact base colour, the exact sun-bleached lighter strands, and the matte dry salt-air texture. No gel, no shine, no restyling. On the reference: medium length down to the collar line, loose waves, swept back from the forehead and to one side with a longer front section falling across the forehead, a medium-brown base with golden sun-bleached highlights, fine dry strands with flyaway hairs.
AGE AND BUILD — exactly as in the reference: a man in his late forties with a lean build.
Invent nothing about the face, the hair or the build. Where a detail is not visible in the reference, keep it neutral rather than inventing it.

Wardrobe, all of it visible in frame: an open cream linen shirt with the sleeves pushed up, worn over a cream cotton t-shirt, and the single short strand of small round amber-brown wooden beads sitting snug at the base of the neck, the shirt and the beads exactly as in the reference. The shirt is soft natural linen, loosely draped, mostly smooth with a few broad soft creases. On the chest of the t-shirt, centred, is the printed design exactly as it appears on the t-shirt in the reference, reproduced exactly as it is there: the same shapes, the same colours, the same proportions and the same details, a clean intact print with solid ink, lying flat on the cotton and following the folds of the fabric, taking the same dusk light as the rest of the garment.

Framing and pose, this is what changes from the reference: a medium shot, vertical, taken from above, the camera about two metres above his head and two metres in front of him, looking down at him at an angle of about forty-five degrees, from the top of the head down to the lowest ribs. He sits on a grassy slope well back from the edge of a chalk cliff, with several metres of open grass between him and the drop, turned three-quarters toward the left of the frame, his gaze travelling past the lens to the pale band of the horizon, his lips slightly parted as if about to sing a word. Hands below the bottom edge of frame. Expression still and inward, unperformed. A steady sea wind blows along the frame and lifts the strands of his hair toward the left. Behind him the open grass stretches away level and wide, and far beyond it the chalk cliffs run off into the distance along the shore, soft and defocused. His head takes roughly one quarter of the frame height, set slightly right of centre.

Background and light: the clifftop at Seven Sisters, East Sussex, England, in the late blue hour, thirty-five minutes after sunset, darker than the earlier frames. There is no sun and no visible light source in frame. The only light is the dusk sky itself, a large soft source to the left, so the light on his face is gentle and even, with softly graded shadows under the cheekbone, along the nose and under the lower lip. Exposure is low-key and a little lower than in the earlier frames, but his face is fully readable. His skin keeps its natural warm tone; only the sky and the distance take the cool dusk colour. The sea is dark slate, the cliffs pale grey-blue, and the sky a deep blue-grey, darker toward the top, with the thin pale band along the horizon at the far left almost gone. Colours are natural and unsaturated. The same single light falls on his clothes: the left shoulder and the left sleeve are the lighter ones, the right shoulder and the right side of the shirt fall into soft cool shadow, there is no frontal fill, and the white linen is dimmer than the lightest part of the sky near the horizon, reading as a cool grey-white in the shadows rather than a bright cream.

Hair: all the hair, on his head and in his beard, is brown to sun-bleached golden-brown, and there are no grey or white hairs anywhere, none at the temples, none in the moustache and none in the beard or the stubble. Every hair is resolved as an individual strand: strands of uneven thickness that cross, separate and lie in different directions, fine flyaway hairs lifting at the temples and crown, light passing through the thinnest strands at the edges, and beard hairs visible one by one, growing at different angles with uneven length.

Rendering: a candid documentary photograph on a full-frame camera, 50 mm lens, f/2.8, ISO 800, 1/125 second, a clean low-noise file, ungraded colour as it comes from the camera. Fine detail is strongest at the eyes; the shirt, the grass and the background are rendered softer and calmer than the face. The skin is that of a clean unretouched photograph: tone changes softly across the large planes of the forehead, cheeks and neck, fine pores are visible only on the nose and cheeks where the light catches them, expression lines appear only where the face really creases, and the rest of the surface is continuous and calm, without an all-over network of tiny wrinkles.

A vertical photograph of the night sky after the end of twilight, photographed from the clifftop at Seven Sisters, East Sussex, England, looking out over the sea.

The sky fills about three quarters of the frame. It is a deep blue-black near the top and lightens gradually downward to a dark muted blue. Low at the far left, just above the faded trace of the sunset along the horizon, hangs a thin waxing crescent moon with a soft clean edge and a faint glow of earthshine on its dark part. In the upper sky a few stars show, faint and small, of different brightness, a handful brighter than the rest and many barely visible, scattered unevenly. At the bottom of the frame the dark sea lies in long calm swells under the last faint pale line on the horizon at the left, and at the lower right the black silhouette of the clifftop with a few blades of grass against the sky.

Light: the sea at Seven Sisters in the first hour of night. The only light is the sky, the moon and the last faint trace of the sunset at the far left; the moon is thin and gives almost no light on the landscape. White balance is neutral and the colours are natural and deeply muted.

Realism: the scene is rendered as a real night photograph at a real scale. The stars are small points of light with natural differences in brightness and a gentle falloff, not a dense even scatter, and the moon is a thin crescent with a believable soft edge. The sky has a smooth tonal gradient with no banding. The sea is calm, with faint cool sheen on the swells and no glitter. Tones are soft with a natural tonal range, and the finest detail is held on the stars and the crescent.

Rendering: a candid documentary photograph on a full-frame camera, 35 mm lens, f/2, ISO 3200, a four-second exposure on a tripod, the stars and the horizon sharp, ungraded colour as it comes from the camera, a clean low-noise file.
